It's disgusting. There are great points made in this story, but it seems to be just every philosophy that anyone has ever found crushed together to make some off-fly conclusion. How is this possible when you're trying to express that we're all individuals? OG shapes a "true story" (where is the proof?) In a short story with various philosophical references and mana I imagine that the OG was rolling in the dough after he wrote this book in the 1970s. Is it the greatest miracle, or the fastest sperm? If I am guessing correctly, the seventies were a time when most individuals were caught between fantastic and logical. The liberals at the time must have had a field day. I always find these kind of weird books. I cannot decipher specific philosophical points given throughout the story, which is important if you want to make a real impression on a reader. As it goes, everything seems to be kneaded into some kind of mumbo-jumbo. Second person can't tell someone that it's like this because your self-esteem is enough, it doesn't mean you can solve the problems that come to you every day. Laughter. This will make you feel like a real person - an individual does not need to isolate himself from the 4 billion other spermators. That makes you feel special, doesn't it? Do what you love. A great inspiring writer tells his story - a narrative that will embrace you as it reveals exciting new secrets for your personal happiness and success. The solution The Memorandum of God tries to bring is to find a common denominator among all humans, so the "you" makes sense. The problem with this memo is that it is not moving and does not present a real solution. You never got over this training. "That's all great. Of course, it makes me feel great to know that I was the fastest sperm. This makes it more interesting, but very How would this help a person's self-esteem? But to transform this into a counter-argument from: Well, there's a reason. As a seller and writer of articles, he must have known how to make people believe in what he said without secularizing his beliefs. Unless someone provides me tangible events from the events that occurred in this story, I prefer not to believe them. Writing is a little disjointed. I remember this to my friends when they are uncertain about something. Why do there need to be a supernatural explanation? Just make me take you less. Be yourself. OG molds a true "true" (where is proof?) In a tale with several philosophic references and manages to connect it to a religious message. As for Shakespeare's aphorism, guilt is in us, no because we can not control things, but because we do not do anything about them. à É œBut you are the fastest sperm! It must be why you can not run. Meanwhile, he keeps the facts discussing the evolution. Say that the longer you are unhappy, better reward you will receive, without an explanation is the stupid thing that you can always say to someone. So what I think can increase self. Does a person esteem? It will not help the solid.
